Subject: It's called...

It is called capitalism. And in it's purest form there is a demand, Microsoft meets it and in return: money, power, etc. I am sorry for the competition being behind the curve to the point of helplessness. So be it! That is life. And many people experience that in far more painful ways everyday. Now, attempting to somehow mangle Microsoft's position via government "intervention" suggest we live in some Orwellian home of the free, land of the brave. So in this beautiful Republic (that we call Democratic) land of existence I leave the following: It is so very pleasant to see the "perceived" economic elite get porked and pissed (without so much as a...hug) by someone of higher economic status than they! Uncle Sammy, please help poor pitiful pampered me!! Ah, those beautiful sounds of children playing; they only squeal when life, on those rare occasions, doesn't go there way.

Take care (and don't forget to write),
